

Maharam and Artforum at The Armory Show

To mark the twenty-fifth anniversary edition of The Armory Show, Artforum and Maharam celebrate over two decades of art and dialogue with a commemorative media lounge at Pier 94 in New York. In partnership with Artforum, the leading contemporary art magazine, the Armory25 media lounge acts as an extension of the public lounge located at the south end of Pier 94, activating The Armory Show's aim to inspire dialogue, discovery, and patronage of the visual arts.

Maharam will provide the lounge's furnishings and backdrop including seating originally designed for Prototype Rail System (A), an installation by the multimedia conceptual artist Liam Gillick for Maharam's 2013 NeoCon presentation in Chicago. Reflecting minimalist finesse, Gillick's constructivist benches and low-lying plinths were meticulously produced as art objects in white powder-coated aluminum. Their low height maintains an open space, while movable woolen cushions offer material contrast and a comfortable vantage for observation. Given Gillick's examination of the ways in which art and architecture impact social interaction, as well as his ties to the formative years of The Armory Show, his pieces were a natural selection from Maharam's collection and uniquely suited for a lounge intended as a flexible platform for a variety of media.

An accompanying digital wall installation highlighting memorable Artforum covers between 1994–2019 was designed by the magazine in partnership with Maharam's Digital Imaging studio which translates custom artwork to various substrates via fine-art quality, large-format digital printing. As with Maharam Digital Projects, Maharam's Digital Imaging reflects a range of subject matter and styles while harnessing advanced printing techniques for complex, high-resolution imagery in a full-color spectrum.

Two expansive, custom birch tables offer additional surfaces for guests to browse archival Artforum issues and explore The Armory Show's twenty-five-year history. The installation is well timed with the launch of Artforum's digital archive—a fully searchable editorial catalogue that begins with its first issue in 1962. Artforum will be joined by two additional publications in booth A3: The Art Newspaper and podcast Deep Color.
