

Herman Miller Announces First Ever Podcast Focused On the Future of Work

Looking → Forward

Today Herman Miller announced its very first podcast focused on the future of work, entitled “Looking Forward.” The weekly podcast will be hosted by Ryan Anderson, Vice President of Global Research and Insights at Herman Miller.

The podcast will focus on examining the current trends, research and conversations surrounding the future of work. Leading voices in the space including research, innovation, and business leaders will join Ryan each episode, offering a wide range of perspectives to help organizations better understand new ways of working.

“We know that the pandemic has accelerated new ways of working and that organizations around the world are trying to understand how to best support work in the future. To assist in these conversations, we’re excited to make available new and helpful insights from a variety of leading thinkers to guide leaders in determining what’s best for their organizations.”

In the inaugural episode, Ryan welcomes Brian Elliott of Future Forum to discuss how companies can embrace more flexible work experiences. Topics include managing distributed teams, the effect of the pandemic on employee expectations, and avoiding “false flexibility.”

You can learn more at www.hermanmiller.com/futureofwork, and episodes can be found on Spotify or Apple Podcasts.

<https://news.hermanmiller.com/news?item=122648>